

Dogwood Crossing, Miles has recently produced an in-house curated exhibition Habitat: Environmental Art of the Darling Downs.

Following a very successful opening night, in which many people travelled great distances to be present, we continue to receive positive feedback about this exhibition.

Habitat draws together the work of over 30 Australian artists and scientists who have responded to and studied the natural environment of the Darling Downs, south-east Queensland, from the late nineteenth century to the present day. From seminal artists such as Kenneth Macqueen, Nita C Lester and Sam Fullbrook to thinkers and makers engaging with the landscape today, this exhibition weaves the history of the area; celebrating the abundant natural assets while examining the process of continual change as a result of human interaction with the land.

Habitat will be on show in the John Mullins Memorial Art Gallery until 13 January 2015 (closed Christmas period, 25 Decemeber 2014 - 4 January 2015). We hope to see you at Dogwood Crossing soon.